Investment Commentary⁴

The real economies of the western world continued to suffer as many parts of Europe went into lockdown in mid-December, with many keeping strict lockdowns in place over the Christmas and New Year holiday period to try and slow the second wave of the pandemic. In the UK parts of the economy had a small recovery as manufacturing was buoyed up by panic buying in front of a possible no deal Brexit. Inventories increased to allow for any supply chain glitches that could occur with any new trade deal or hard Brexit. This was a real possibility right up to the point on Christmas Eve when a "Deal" was announced. This pickup was aided by coming out of the second lockdown and the short run to the Christmas break. Away from manufacturing and transport, the service sector weakened further as stricter measures were put in place to slow the spread of the more contagious new strain of virus.

Getting the Brexit deal done was positive news. However, importantly for the UK, it did not include financial services. This needs to be done at a later date and it could be argued that it is at least as important as the overall Brexit deal, this sector generates a considerable percentage of UK GDP. Until this deal is done, the sector is working under a no deal Brexit scenario. Although many - if not most - Banks and trading businesses had already transferred any EU-focused operations to a European centre such as Paris, Frankfurt, Madrid or Dublin in advance of the event. The UK no longer has seamless access to European markets.

Subsequent to the month end the whole of the UK was put into a full lockdown by Westminster and all regional administrations, which is currently expected to carry through until at least March. A further support package of £4.6 billion to help all businesses was also announced, which seems to have been taken well although there is a rising media coverage of the lack of support for around 3 million self-employed who seem to have been missed by the various support mechanisms. Everything now depends on the ability of the NHS and the supply chain to vaccinate the population in line with government promises and expectations. After that we will be able to see how fast business areas that have been hit hardest, such as travel, leisure and entertainment and not forgetting high street retail, can recover; unfortunately, some will not have survived to reopen.

In Europe the Flash PMI surveys that were published before the imposition of lockdowns mid-month showed that many business sectors were more optimistic than they had been for some time except in consumer facing sectors. It was then hardly a surprise when the official HIS Markit Eurozone Composite PMI survey was published post the end of the month they were 3.5 points lower at 45.3 with a much more negative narrative.

Away from the madness that is the last few weeks of the Trump presidency in the real US economy the Non-Farm Payroll figure for November showed jobs fell down by 245k against a forecast of a rise of 469k; which is hardly good news as Covid-19 continues to run riot across the USA. Whilst many tech stocks go further into what can be viewed as bubble territory it is difficult to predict the point where and for what reason this changes especially when it is not in the interests of governments or central banks to have a market fallout of major proportions. So until markets can look clearly at a post-Covid economy when a truer picture of the recovery and direction of travel can be made we focus on what we can see in front of us.

For the Company's portfolio we sold a proportion of Urban Logistics REIT given its outperformance against a weak sector. We also sold the small holding of Investec 6 ¾% perpetual. New holdings were opened in House of HR 7.5% 2027 (a European recruitment group), Sparrow 10.5% 2024 (an offshore maintenance and engineering group) and Modulaire 10% 2023 (warehousing and storage facilities) also adding to RM direct lending equity holding. Looking to 2021, it is all about the vaccines, and how the economy shapes up.
